

A program to support babies
showing early social and communication differences in Western Australia.

Inklings is a program to support babies aged 6-18 months who are showing differences in how they communicate with and relate to others.

Backed by decades of research, the program seeks to support baby's development through enhancing understanding, connection and relating between caregivers and their baby.

To make an enquiry or to see if your baby is eligible for Inklings, simply scan the QR code or contact:

T: 1300 030 655

E: inklings@thekids.org.au

W: inklings.org.au/wa

Inklings Program in WA

The Inklings Program is funded in Western Australia through the National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS) as part of a new partnership between the NDIS, The Kids Research Institute Australia, Child and Adolescent Health Service and WA Country Health Service to support babies showing early social and communication differences.

There is no out-of-pocket expense for eligible families participating in Inklings in WA

